Last call of the assessors!

Time to be reducing your stock of three-cent postage stamps and two-cent postal cards.

Among our expected summer guests we can get along without is the 17-year locust. In fact, there is no welcome anywhere for Mr. Pest.

The News predicts that Lieut. Gov. Mason S. Stone will know everyone on the boat that will take him over before he has been out three days. We wish him luck and a safe return.—Northfield News.

And if it comes to a draw vote he will break the tie and order the ship into the terminal forthwith.

The German who is alleged to have tried to set fire to the transport Patricia on the homeward trip with several thousand New England troops is now called "crazy." While admitting that possibility, it would be well to investigate "higher up" and see whether the lunacy was not infectious.

Another of the weekly newspapers in Vermont to raise its subscription price because of the advanced cost of the various materials going into the making of a newspaper is the Randolph Herald and News, which states that after May 1 the subscription price will be two dollars per year. The Herald and News certainly is justified in asking for the increase because it is one of the finest weekly newspapers in northern New England and is a distinct credit to the field in which it circulates.

All the Barre banks are ready to put themselves at your service in buying bonds of the fifth (Victory) loan; and to accommodate the bank people as much as possible in that public service you ought to make application for the bonds at the earliest possible moment. The banks are generally crowded to capacity toward the last of the open period for the loan, in addition to doing their own business, which, by the way, takes up the normal working hours of the day. Therefore, it would be the considerate thing to do to subscribe early and make the final rush as light as possible.

The experience of the two aviators who fell into the Irish sea in the preliminary stage of their trans-Atlantic flight from the British Isles to the United States may come in handy once they attempt the real flight they have in mind. That they escaped without injury when their machine plunged into the Irish sea is perhaps an augury of safety should a similar event befall them somewhere in the Atlantic, although they will need all their resources because the Atlantic ocean is a far larger body of water than the Irish sea and is not so easily covered by the supporting ships.

It is reported that a large number of foreigners now in the United States are preparing to leave for their home countries just as soon as the peace treaty shall have been signed and that they are taking with them a huge sum of money in the aggregate, the money representing the accumulations of their years of labor in the United States. No doubt the reason for their determination to return to their home land is because of the belief that the reorganization incident to peace will mean the opening up of many opportunities for those having a little money and those possessed of a willingness to work. It is a more or less doubtful outlook for many reasons, and not likely to prove so attractive in the reality as these people believe at the present time. There never will be the advantages of industry which the United States offers, and, in addition, there will be unusual burdens imposed upon the people of the European countries in the re-establishment of the conditions which existed prior to the war. The newcomers to the countries must assume their share of that burden along with the people who have worried through more than four years of war.

WHAT THE GOVERNMENT WANTS OF US.

The formal opening of the fifth effort of the United States government to raise a great sum of money by subscription will come next Monday. The government is to raise $4,500,000,000. The interest rate on the issue will be 4½ per cent, the highest yet fixed by the government. The bonds, or notes, will be of short-term maturity; that is, the government will pay back the money, plus interest, within a few years. These obligations of the United States government are, therefore, in some ways more attractive than any of the bonds of previous issues floated since the government went to war with Germany.

Reason why the government is asking for these four billion, five hundred million dollars at this time is contained in the simple statement that the United States has bought something and must pay for it. Therefore, it is coming to the people of the nation to secure a loan sufficient to cover the balance of the government's debts.

Shall we loan the money which the government asks? Of course we shall. It would be rank disloyalty, as well as the passing up of a great opportunity for investment, if we should fail to provide the full amount sought by the government. We as a nation committed ourselves to the task of defeating Germany; and we and our allies performed that task. Now we must provide the means for cleaning up that military victory. The money so willingly subscribed in the four previous loans falls somewhat short of the amount required for closing up the current expense account of the government. Now let us finish the job by raising the balance needed. Let every man, woman and child invest to the limit of his ability.

WILLIAMSTOWN

Rev. Alba M. Markey, lately transferred from the New Hampshire conference to the Vermont conference and appointed to the Centenary M. E. church of this town by Bishop Leete, comes to this pastorate with 23 years' experience in our neighboring state, and for the past 10 years he has served as conference statistician. He was trained for the ministry in Boston university, after which he graduated with honor from the conference course of study. Mr. Markey is a Mason and an Odd Fellow, being a past grand in the latter order and also a past chief patriarch in the camp. He was made an honorary member of the G. A. R. post at Wells River. Mr. Markey has the reputation of being a thorough and efficient worker at anything that he undertakes and has evidently entered on his pastorate here with a will to do all that he can for his parish and the commonwealth at large.

PLAINFIELD

Neither cloudy skies nor muddy roads kept members of the Mothers' club from meeting with Mrs. Cora Perry Thursday afternoon. Eight members and one visitor were present. The afternoon was spent in sewing. Several short sketches were read, as follows: "Teaching Children the Value of Money," Maude Bartlett; "The Secret of It," (Julia Ward Howe), Olive Rublee; "Mother's Disappointment," Sarah Baldwin; "Elizabeth's Effort," Bessie Farnham; "Teaching Children to Enjoy Everything," Annie Bartlett. A delicious supper was served. The next meeting will be held with Mrs. Mildred Paige Thursday afternoon, May 1.

National Bank Protection for your Savings"

Loans

National banks are not allowed to loan to any individual, firm or corporation more than 10 per cent of the capital and surplus of the bank.

Loans on real estate are limited to 50 per cent of the actual value of the property at the time the loan is made, and the fact that the loan meets this requirement must be certified on the note itself by an officer and director of the bank.

All loans are passed upon by the board of directors and approved at their regular meetings.

The strength and service of any bank depends very largely upon the sound judgment and discretion exercised in the extension of loans, and in this connection we would say that it has always been with a feeling of our great responsibility as a trustee of the public's money, a responsibility which we are keenly sensible of, that the funds of this bank have been invested.

In our next advertisement we shall consider "Investments," and particularly bond investments, and what classes of this particular security your money is placed in.

HERE AND THERE
ABOUT BARRE

So much has been written lately about Honey brook and its environs that it may be interesting to know how the brook came to bear a name of such odd nature. For 90 years there dwelt a man on the East Barre road who kept bees, and the bees produced honey that was of particular sweetness, or so the boys of that time believed. It happened that a party of youngsters could not resist trying out the honey, and in order to get at the honey without being stung they procured a large number of matches with which they burned the bees. Their progress to the hives being thus rendered easy, they proceeded to satisfy their inner longings and then to carry away what they could not eat at the time.

Being at a loss to know where to cache their ill-gotten spoils, they proceeded along the road until they came to the bridge under which a little brook named Gale brook (bearing the name of a settler nearby) gurgled its noisy way into Jail branch. Crawling under the bridge, they found a place to hide their surplus honey until the same should be disposed of in the way most satisfactory to boys.

But alas! it was not so to be, for the owner of the bees, doing the Sherlock Holmes act, came to Barre lower village and made the rounds of the few stores until he located the place where a quantity of matches had recently been bought. He next learned the names of the purchasers or at least some of them—and the cat was out of the bag in a short time.

soon had the whole youthful party of honey plunderers rounded up, and the boys (or their parents) had some sizeable bills to meet, reading "To honey, etc."—blank dollars (the exact amount of each bill not being recorded—and, as a matter of fact, this incident has never been recorded so far as we know). Then the boys' confession having included a fearful statement of what had become of the surplus honey, the owner of the property went to the little old bridge spanning the Gale brook flowing into the Jail branch, and there underneath the structure he found the honey that was left after the youthful gorge.

So ever after that incident the Gale brook has been known as Honey brook; and so it will remain until some new vagary of the human fancy may change it. All the participants in the incident have passed on with a single exception; and the magnitude of the offense has become lessened by time and contemplation of the good deeds that far outweighed the evil of the little honey expedition on the East Barre road.

But while we are on the subject of Honey brook, a subject which was so interestingly handled by a recent contributor in these columns, it may be well to refer in passing to the old granite house which stands high up on the left bank of the brook about halfway to the top of the picturesque gully. A good many people have wondered at the structure erected on a back road and in a section of the country where wooden farm houses predominate and granite houses almost never are seen.

This old granite house lacks one year of being 80 years old. It was erected in 1840 and it stands to-day like a memorial to the builder, Piny Wheaton, grandfather of the present Piny O. Wheaton, who now owns the property but who himself lives just across the road. The elder Piny Wheaton was the owner of the granite quarry which is still referred to by the older people of Barre as the Wheaton quarry although it has long since gone under a different commercial name. Piny Wheaton, the elder, spent 100 wearisome days getting out and shaping the stones which make the present sturdy walls of the house on the bank of Honey brook. He had assistance in putting the walls into shape and in the completing of the structure, but his handiwork went into all phases of the construction from the time the granite was wrested from the bosom of the earth a short distance away until the last finishing touches were put on the house.

After these four score years, the house stands true and seems destined to be one of the landmarks for centuries under normal conditions.

Casual visitors who may clamber over the huge granite boulders that form part of the bed of the stream in the Honey brook gully may be interested enough to turn aside, westward on the road which leads around Cobble hill, in order to take a glimpse of this Wheaton monument, the old stone house.

A Friendly Suggestion.

"Bridget, I don't want you to have so much company. Why, you have more callers in a day than I have in a week." "Well, mum, perhaps if you'd try to be a little more agreeable, you'd have as many friends as I have."—Boston Transcript.
